

Editor's Comment:

The authors have not addressed all of the comments from the editors. For example, they did not correct the point "The paragraph under the Table 3 the sentence starting as: "The Height, Weight and BMI of Urban women was higher than rural women"": It would be wrong to indicate that the weight of the urban women was higher than those of rural because it did not reach the statistical significance. This result may stem from merely chance." We still do not know if there is a statistically significant difference between women in urban and rural areas.

Also, a point that required specific details for software used in statistical analysis was not addressed. References are corrected according to the journal's requirements.

All in all, it seems that the authors did not make all the correct changes. In that light, I would not accept this paper for publication. However, I would let the chief editor make a decision.
