

Editor's Comment:

I have nothing to owe the publication of the article, if the Direction of the magazine so decides. However, I maintain my appreciation that this article has a scant bibliographic support, which reflects a weak discussion of it. I just point out that the Bibliographic Reference Standards are not being respected. For example: "....studies conducted by Kamksha Garj, Anju Garewal... et al (10 April 2020) on knowledge...." The reference "Kamksha Garj, et al." must be included in the list of final bibliographic references and must be assigned a numbering that identifies it both in the position of the list as in the text, a situation that the author does not comply with.
