Compulsory REVISION comments	This manuscript has a name, "Literature review," the document reviewed scholars' contributions in the topic field and made conclusions of other scholars. There is no new revelation in the document rather a summarization of the findings of other scholars. I suggest two things: <ol style="list-style-type: none">1. The author should consider inserting literature review as the methodology of collecting data and justify that data collected is secondary data from sources data was collected.2. The author makes the bold step to collect primary data (quantitative or qualitative) and find out how owners of small businesses enhanced their companies post COVID-19. Otherwise, the manuscript is not worth publication in an academic journal. There is no newness in the paper's findings, which is necessary for research; otherwise, the paper should be considered a literature review.	The work is a qualitative study, and thus, does not need a methodology
