| Compulsory REVISION comments | This article addresses an interesting topic and shows that it is essential to train graduate teaching assistants (GTA). This article has many strengths. For example, the structure of the article is appropriate, and despite the punctuation problems, the way this article is written is considered appropriate. In the discussion section, the findings of this article are discussed in detail. However, this article has a fundamental scientific critique and that is the research design. This research is action research, but the criteria of action research have not been followed in this research. In the results section, a series of goals for the training content have been considered, which could be used as criteria for measuring the success of the ADDIE model for designing training programs for GTAs. So that these criteria could be measured before and after the training course and then judge the effectiveness of the ADDIE model. | Thank you for the review. Authors have revised the research methodology and included the action research. The changes are highlighted in the relevant section. |
