Minor REVISION comments	This work addresses a management approach for the conservation of the physicochemical and microbiological properties of the soil in the face of climate change and the salinization of irrigation water, in addition to the intensive and non-rational use of chemical fertilizers, which will lead to a gradual deterioration in fertility. soils. this summary article explains the approach used (INM) involves the integration of all sources of organic and inorganic nutrients which aims to improve the productivity of crops as well as soils. According to the results obtained INM not only improves the nutrient use efficiency (NUE), but also improves the physical, chemical and biological properties of soils, which further improves soil health and sustainability. This review paper is perfectly structured and the synthesis of recent references used is well illustrated. I recommend its publication with respect to the publication standards of the journal	Noted
