Compulsory REVISION comments	<ol style="list-style-type: none">1. A case report should bring out something significant/unusual/out of the ordinary about the diagnosis, treatment, investigations, complications, outcomes, etc. The reason for writing the case report is not clear. Rewrite to bring this out.2. The language being used can be made to be more academic.3. You may need to introduce the case in the light of why you are reporting it. The introduction of a general description of the disease but not of the case in question. It should tell the reader why this is significant to report4. Revise and elaborate on the patient information to show the clear development of the case from beginning to the end of the process of management5. We should also consider appropriate consent has been obtained before reporting the case.6. Discuss what is special about the case being presented and why it is important for the academic and scientific community	Thanks. Changes made as suggested.
Minor REVISION comments
Optional/General comments	It is important to present the report in an academic language. If the primary language for communication is not English, there could be issues with translating the information from another language.
