Compulsory REVISION comments	All experiments were carefully conducted to make the conclusion. However, previous studies already reported about BPA exposure and testicular development. This work aimed to investigate BPA induced alteration in testicular development and fertility at peri-adolescence, adolescence, and adulthood. Only one point should be asked to the authors, why don't you start to administer BPA in 3 aged such as 40 PND for peri-adolescence, 60 PND for adolescence and 90 PND for adulthood?	Thank you for the kind review, most pubertal changes have been noted to happen in male rats between 42-105 postnatal days, thus experiments were bifurcated into three distinct developmental stages peri-adolescence, adolescence, and adulthood.
