Compulsory REVISION comments	It was a pleasure to be considered as a reviewer for this paper. Indeed, homework is an important element of the teaching and learning process. However, this work was not clear nor was it focused. For example, a clear purpose was not stated. The Literature Review added nothing substantive. The work was given attributes that are unique to human (anthropomorphism). The transitions were repetitious and simplistic (e.g., "In addition, the finding concluded that the homework improved academic achievement for high school students. Further, homework helped the students to develop their study habits. Furthermore, …."). The writing was not up to scholarly standard. It may be that English is not the author's native language. However, if the work is to be printed in an English language journal, it must meet the grammatical standards for the language. Hence, the author must use Grammarly and/or employ the service of an editor. The sampling spoke to a "purposely" as well as a random method. It was not made clear how both were employed. Such a discrepancy negatively impacted the work.
