Compulsory REVISION comments	The authors have concluded that the effect of soil compaction as a result of tractor wheel passes should be minimized on agricultural fields to reduce the adverse effects on soil physical properties and soybean growth and yield. The above studies were apparently carried out on dry run of the tractors. Before that the field was ploughed twice and the land was levelled manually before the tractor runs. But what is required is to study the effect of tractor weight, number of runs, depth of ploughing etc with the ploughing apparatus attachment with the tractor (see enclosed photos) as carried out in the enclosed publication. So the Referee is compelled to reject this manuscript. Effect of tractor weight, depth of ploughing and wheel placement during ploughing in an organic cereal rotation on contrasting soils A.K.
